COMPULSORY VACCINATION

Oxlifornia has a law excluding from the public schools children that are not vaccinated. A test case was brought in the higher courts of that state and on last Thursday Superior Judge Lucas F. Smith, in an opinion, held that the law is unconstitutional in that it is discriminatory.

"It is no answer," says Judge Smith, "to this penal statute to say, as the counsel for the state board of health contends, that parents who do not believe in vaccination can send their children to private schools and thus avoid the consequences of the penal statute. It is an old and fundamental principle of justice that all criminal laws should operate alike upon all classes of people, whether they be rich or poor. A rich man could send his children to a private school, as suggested by the attorney for the state board of health, and thus avoid being arrested and punished under said penal statute; but should the poor man be punished as a criminal because he is unable to send his children to a private school, and does not believe in vaccination, and for that reason his children are barred from attending the public schools? Such an interpretation of the two statutes would work a great injustice to a large class of people."

Stating his position as to compulsory vaccination, the Judge

"While I am opposed to all compulsory vaccination laws, yet I am a believer in vaccination as a protection against smallpox. But much has been said and written by learned men to the contrary. And while our state board of health is rendering valuable services to the people of the state in many ways, yet I do not believe the law empowers it to compel, by writ of mandate, another board of equal standing before the law to exclude children from the public schools when there is no public necessity for so doing.'

This is an issue which may be brought before the people of Utah. The inability of our boards of health to eradicate smallpox has prompted many persons to advocate a law of compulsory vaccination. It is a question which, undoubtedly, has two sides and should be approached with due deliberation.

AN APPEAL TO THE MEN OF OGDEN.

This is the season of the year when the housewife should remind the house master that his back yard is in need of a cleaning. Visitors remark that Ogden's back and front yards are a disappointing contrast. The front is attractive, but the rear too often is a catch basin for cans, paper and other rubbish.

The cultivating of a beautiful front yard, bedecked with flowers, while the yard in the back is neglected, reminds one of the fellow with a clean shirt and collar and unclean under garments.

From the point of the health it is far more essential to have wholesome premises than to possess lilac bushes, all fragrant and beautiful, hiding garbage heaps.

The large empty centers of our blocks have made it easy for our people to dump waste material in the unoccupied areas and these inviting receptacles for rubbish have made possible the growth of a careless indifference to the disposal of rubbish until the time has come for some concerted action to be taken to stop the practice.

Ogden should clean up. The women do their duty when they keep the interior and the front of the home attractive. Now it is for the men to challenge the women to a contest, in which the men shall undertake to keep the back yards fit for strangers to see and above the criticism of the sanitary inspector.

A back yard without rubbish or ill-smelling garbage is as delightful a sight as a garden of roses.

Now while the wives proceed to beautify with flowers, let the husbands plant good resolves in their part of the home and, with careful cultivation, raise the standard of the Ogden back lot, so that when strangers peep through the cracks in the fence they will be agreeably surprised to find cleanliness, and everything orderly

RAILROADS WEST OF OGDEN.

The repairing of the track north of Great Salt Lake, which at one time was part of the old Central Pacific line in to Ogden, is not only a precautionary measure to assure uninterrupted traffic over the Southern Pacific road, but a movement to give to a considerable population in the northwest part of the state transportation facilities.

With the opening of immense tracts of land to cultivation, such as the Crocker estate ranch, the population of that part of Box Elder must increase rapidly and it will not be long before the reconstructed line will find sufficient to do to justify a train service regardless of whatever through business may be diverted to that

But the most important move on the part of the railroad people, having for its object the opening up of a second or third route west from Ogden in connection with the Ogden-Lucin cut-off is the building of the railroad from Saline, on Promontory Point, north along the shore line of the lake to Rozel, connecting with the old Central Pacific at a point a short distance east of Kelton. This road is to be part of a short route in to central Idaho and the northwest, and at the same time it is to answer the purposes of an auxiliary line to the Ogden-Lucin cut-off, affording a choice of two lines west from Promontory Point to the junction of the old Central Pacific and the new Southern Pacific lines.
